

Calocedrus decurrens

Incense Cedar

Sun

Moderate to little water

Origin: California and Oregon

The Incense Cedar is a stately tree growing about 2 feet a year up to about 60 feet high and 15 wide in a garden site. Young trees have a classic pyramidal form and have broad, flat sprays of scale like leaves. Both the wood and foliage have a spicy fragrance. Male cones shed dusty yellow pollen in mid winter. Female cones open in later summer and resemble duck bills. This is the timber Cedar used for lumber production. It makes a handsome specimen, large screen or street tree.
